Dear Speaker DeLeo, President Spilka, and Governor Baker,

We are public health and health care professionals concerned about systemic racism, writing to respectfully urge the legislature to enact and the Governor to sign police reform legislation. Specifically, we urge you to rise to this historic moment by swiftly enacting law to end qualified immunity, restrict harmful use of force practices, and ban government use of facial recognition technology.

Systemic racism is a lethal public health crisis. The public health and health care community has long recognized the ways in which racism has contributed to the pervasive health inequities and injustices that permeate every aspect of existence for people of color, and have devastated both the physical and mental health of individuals subjected to these abuses on a daily basis. Health outcomes are produced by multi-dimensional and intersecting factors, including social, economic, environmental, and biological, which all contribute to a person and community’s health status.

Disparities in these outcomes often reflect structural and systemic inequities in a community and society. The impacts of institutionalized systems of oppression and bias can be seen in the higher mass incarceration rates, higher risk of exposure to chronic disease and illness, worse health outcomes, higher rates of morbidity and mortality, lower life expectancies, mental health trauma, countless deaths and injuries at the hands of law enforcement, and significant barriers in access to adequate healthcare.

Law enforcement violence and surveillance of Black people are public health issues. As a society with chronically deprioritized public health and underfunded social programs, we have too often inappropriately delegated public health functions to police. Our skewed budget priorities have saddled police with responsibilities they cannot safely see through, and have placed an inequitable burden of mental and physical harm on socioeconomically marginalized communities, particularly for Black and brown people.

The overlap with state violence against people with disabilities is alarming. The risk of being killed during an interaction with law enforcement is 16 times greater for individuals with untreated mental illness than that of any other civilian approached or stopped by police officers, and at least 1 in 4 fatal police encounters ends the life of a person with severe mental illness.¹

Public health approaches to violence prevention and public safety through programs such as addiction treatment work and have been found to decrease robberies and thefts. One study found that for every dollar spent on drug treatment, as many as three dollars were saved in crime reduction.² Investing in early-childhood education, providing food, housing, and increasing opportunity can treat and address the root causes that contribute to criminal activity. Law enforcement and criminalization often punish individuals after the fact, but do little to fix a problem that will continue to manifest in the future.

We strongly support legislation that includes provisions for harm-reduction and the de-escalation of the use of violence by law enforcement against the people of Massachusetts. Such a law must reduce the role of police in situations where social interventions are safer and more effective, and explicitly recognize that law enforcement violence and surveillance pose dangers to public health. We call on the legislature to adopt and the Governor to sign law that achieves the following critical goals:

- Fix language in current state law requiring a plaintiff to show that a violation of rights was accompanied by “threats, intimidation or coercion,” which courts have interpreted to let officers off the hook for many direct violations of rights, even ones involving physical abuse.
- Eliminate the judicial doctrine known as “qualified immunity,” which shields police from being held accountable to their victims—even when they blatantly and seriously violate people’s civil rights, including by excessive use of force resulting in serious physical harm or even death. When healthcare officials and other trusted professionals flagrantly harm people, we are held accountable. So too should police.
- Mandate Department of Public Health reporting that recognizes police-involved injuries and deaths are dangerous to public health, and require the promulgation of regulations to create mechanisms for physicians and health care providers to report police-involved injuries and deaths.

- Require officers to attempt de-escalation and limit the use of force by creating an individual right against unnecessary use of force.

- Prohibit the use of chokeholds, chemical weapons, rubber bullets, and attack dogs. Police should never deploy chemical and respiratory irritants which induce coughing attacks, such as tear gas and pepper spray. The use of these weapons, which are banned in combat, against demonstrators during a pandemic that is spread by respiratory droplets is particularly unconscionable. The corrosive effects of these chemical agents can increase health risks for the COVID-19 virus, increase the risk of spreading the virus due to the induced coughing, make the respiratory tract more susceptible to infection, and exacerbate underlying medical conditions.

- Ban the use of face and biometric surveillance technology. Face surveillance technology exacerbates existing racial injustices. First, studies show face surveillance algorithms are particularly bad at identifying people with darker skin. Second, Black and Latinx people are disproportionately arrested for a variety of minor offenses, leading to their overrepresentation in mugshot databases. Third, surveillance technologies are often deployed first against low-income communities and communities of color, where law enforcement is already conducting more street-level surveillance than in wealthier, whiter communities. As a result, Black and Latinx people are particularly vulnerable to being tracked and monitored, as law enforcement in Massachusetts are using the technology absent any regulations, oversight, or transparency. Surveillance leads to criminalization and disproportionate police contact with Black and brown people, and it must be reined in immediately.

We, the public health and health care community, write in support of legislation that achieves the above policy reforms as a step in the right direction to begin to undo centuries of institutionalized racism in our Commonwealth. We express solidarity with demonstrators who, at great personal risk, continue to advocate for systemic change to address the public health harms caused by racially disparate police violence and surveillance.

Thank you for your leadership and your public service.

Sincerely,

The undersigned public health, health care, and community professionals

Cc/ Representative Claire Cronin, Representative Aaron Michlewitz, Representative Ronald Mariano, the Black and Latinx Legislative Caucus
